Site audit: Daraz Pakistan

Trainee: Zaheer

Site: https://www.daraz.pk/

Read on: 3 November 2026 (Asia/Karachi)

Five pages were chosen because they match the two blog topics: choosing a smartphone, and paying, receiving and returning an order. Lengths below are character counts of the live title and meta description after decoding HTML entities.

The training rule used on every row: a title stays within 60 characters, puts the focus keyword near the start, and ends with the brand. A description stays between 140 and 155 characters, includes the keyword, and asks the reader to do one clear thing.

1. Homepage

- URL: https://www.daraz.pk/
- Live title (72): Online Shopping in Pakistan: Fashion, Electronics & Groceries - Daraz.pk
- Live description (8): Pakistan

The keyword sits at the start and the brand sits at the end, which is the right shape. The title is 12 characters over the limit, so the end is what gets cut in a results page. The description is the word "Pakistan". It has no offer, no keyword phrase, and no next step. A shopper who only reads the snippet learns nothing.

2. Smartphones category

- URL: https://www.daraz.pk/smartphones/
- Live title (60): Mobile Price in Pakistan - Buy Smartphones Online - Daraz.pk
- Live description (192): Check Out the Best Smartphone at the Best Price Online in Pakistan at Daraz PK. We Deliver High Quality Mobile Phones in Karachi, Islamabad, Lahore, and All Over the Country. Cash On Delivery.

The title is exactly 60 characters, and it does end with the brand. It leads with "Mobile Price", so the page sounds like a price list. This submission does not invent prices, and the title should not promise a "best" price either. The description is 37 characters over 155. It repeats a quality claim and a city list that do not help someone choose. "Cash On Delivery" is useful, but it is buried at the end.

3. Returns and refunds FAQ

- URL: https://www.daraz.pk/returns-refunds-faq/
- Live title (60): Daraz.pk Returns & Refunds FAQs - Your Quick Reference Guide
- Live description (140): Quickly find answers to your questions about Daraz returns & refunds. Our FAQs are your go-to resource for understanding the return process.

Length is inside the rule: the title is 60 and the description is 140. The brand is at the start, not the end, so the keyword "returns" is not the first idea. The description names the topic and points at the FAQ, which is a real next step. It can still be tighter and put the keyword first.

The page itself is the source for a few shopper facts used later in the blogs, in original sentences: a return request within 14 days of delivery, original undamaged manufacturer packaging, no charge to ship the product back, and the option to return only some items in an order. Those facts are not copied here as a table.

4. How to return a product

- URL: https://www.daraz.pk/wow/i/pk/help/how-to-return
- Live title (47): Quick and Easy Daraz Products Returns Explained
- Live description (150): Discover how to return products on Daraz with ease. Our comprehensive guide simplifies the Daraz return process for a stress-free shopping experience.

The description length is fine. The title has no brand at the end, and "quick and easy" spends the front of the title on a mood instead of the task. Someone searching for how to return a product should see that task first.

5. Buyer Help Center

- URL: https://buyer-helpcenter.daraz.pk/s/page?language=en&pageId=2
- Live title (11): Help Center
- Live description (11): Help Center

This is the weakest page. The title and the description are the same two words. There is no focus keyword, no brand, and no next step. The page itself offers track, return, cancel, payment options, wallet and care contact, but the snippet hides all of that.

What the five pages share

Support pages are closer to the length rule than the homepage and the smartphones category. The homepage description is thin. The smartphones description is long and full of claims. The Help Center snippet could belong to any company. New titles below put the task or the product first and "Daraz" last. New descriptions stay inside 140–155 characters, name the keyword, and tell the reader what to open next. None of them states a price, a specification, or a "best" claim.

New meta titles and descriptions: Daraz Pakistan

Trainee: Zaheer

Brand at the end of every title: Daraz

Rule: title within 60 characters, focus keyword at the start, description 140–155 characters with the keyword and one next step.

FAQ intent

People who are about to pay want to know whether a discount banner matters, what to do when network clearance is missing, what to do if the box is wrong, and whether a guide can pick the model. The answers stay inside the rules: no prices, no specs, no invented clearance steps.

SEO block: smartphone buyer’s guide

How to Choose the Right Smartphone in Pakistan: A Simple Buyer’s Guide

1,022 words. The assigned range is 1,000–1,200.

Status: draft. Not the submitted version.

Most people start a phone search with too many tabs open. A banner says a deal is ending, a friend names a model, and the listing photo is brighter than the phone will ever look in a shop. By the time you reach the text under the photo, you are already tired. That is a poor moment to choose a smartphone in Pakistan, because the choice is supposed to survive a normal Tuesday, not a loud advertisement.

This draft keeps the decision in a safer order. It still refuses to name a model or a price. Those details live on the listing you are reading, and they change.

Start from the day, not the shelf

Before you type anything into search, finish this sentence: “On a normal Tuesday this phone has to ___.” If the blank stays empty, you are shopping for a feeling. Feelings are how budgets break.

People who mostly call, send voice notes and sit in class need the battery story more than they need a camera slogan. Read the battery lines and ask the seller what a full day means for someone who cannot charge at noon. People who take family photos, follow maps or carry work files need the storage line and the camera notes in the text, not the colour of the case. If two listings look the same in the pictures, trust the lines that differ. If a line you care about is missing, ask. Do not invent a feature the seller never wrote.

Write the ceiling down

Put a number on paper for the most you can pay without borrowing later in the month. Do not copy that number from an ad, and do not put it in an article like this one. Online mobile shopping is designed to make tonight feel urgent. Your ceiling is allowed to be boring. If the listing is over it, close the listing. There is no award for stretching.

Read the offer, then the seller

Buying a handset on a marketplace means accepting the text under the photo. Read the storage, the screen size as words, and whatever the seller published about local-network clearance. Silence is not a yes. Ask in writing and keep the answer. One comment that says a phone “worked fine” is not clearance for yours.

Then look at who is selling. A brand printed in the title can still be a different seller’s stock. Find the warranty length and the name you would contact if the phone fails. List what the box should contain, including a charger only if the listing includes one. You will hold that list when the courier is at the door.

Ratings help only as a pile of recent remarks. The same complaint several times is a pattern. A single furious review is not.

Know the way back before you pay

Daraz’s returns and refunds FAQ, published at https://www.daraz.pk/returns-refunds-faq/ , says a shopper can start a return within 14 days of delivery. The product is meant to go back in the original, undamaged manufacturer packaging, without tape on that box. The FAQ also says return shipping is not charged and that you need not send back every item in the order. Some products are excluded. Read that list for the phone you want.

The how-to page at https://www.daraz.pk/wow/i/pk/help/how-to-return walks through My Orders and the form. Photograph the seal. Keep the box. Daraz says a parcel that is not in the condition the policy describes may be sent back to you. The refund table, on a different page, is stated not to cover Daraz Global products. If you do not understand a badge, ask before you pay.

A pocket checklist

On the day you pay, confirm six things. The phone matches your Tuesday sentence. The price on the listing is inside your ceiling. Storage, warranty and network status are written down or answered. You know the seller and the warranty contact. You have read the 14-day window. You opened the smartphones category on Daraz yourself, at https://www.daraz.pk/smartphones/ , rather than from a chat link.

If one line fails, stop. The homepage at https://www.daraz.pk/ will still be there tomorrow.

Compare two listings, not ten

Once the sentence and the ceiling exist, open two listings that both fit them. Put the pages side by side and read only the lines you decided mattered: storage as written, warranty length, who sells, and whether local-network clearance is stated. Ignore the colour swatches until those lines are done. If one listing answers in sentences and the other answers with a slogan on the photo, keep the sentences. If both are vague, you do not have a finalist yet.

Ask both sellers the same question and wait. A fast reply that dodges the question is still a dodge.

Write the answers under the listing titles so you are not comparing from memory. Memory is where a missing charger becomes “I think it was included”. When one listing wins on the lines you chose, stop searching for a third. A third tab is how the ceiling quietly moves. This comparison is the habit the final version keeps, written there as a six-line checklist you can reuse on payday.

Questions still open in this draft

Does the biggest discount win?
Not by itself. Run the checklist first. A discount that still fits is a bonus. A discount that breaks the ceiling is an advertisement doing its job.

What if network clearance is not mentioned?
Ask the seller in writing. No answer, no payment. Do not leave the problem for a relative to fix after the box arrives.

The phone in the box is not the phone in the title.
Photograph it, keep every layer of packaging, and start the return from My Orders while the published window is open. Do not tidy the box into the bin first.

This draft still needs a proper FAQ heading, a link to the Help Center, and the focus keyword moved into the first sentence. Those edits belong in the final, along with a tighter meta title.

How to Choose the Right Smartphone in Pakistan: A Simple Buyer’s Guide

1,176 words. The assigned range is 1,000–1,200.

If you want to choose a smartphone in Pakistan without chasing banners, start with your own day and only then open a listing. A phone is a tool you unlock from breakfast to bedtime. The right one handles that day, comes from a seller you can question, and has a return path you have already read.

This guide does not name a model and it does not quote a price. Prices and specifications change. Use the product page in front of you for every figure. Use this page for the order of decisions.

Name the job the phone has to do

Write one sentence before you search: “I need a phone that can do this on a normal Tuesday.” If you cannot finish it, you are not ready to compare handsets.

Calls, messages and classes
Some people need clear calls, voice notes and a battery that lasts a college or office day. They open the same few apps. A camera slogan will not help if the phone dies before the last class. Read the battery lines on the listing and ask what a full day means in ordinary use. Someone who can charge at a desk at noon can live with a different battery story from someone who is out until evening. The listing does not know your day. You do.

Photos, maps and work

Other people shoot family events, follow maps, or keep work files on the phone. Those jobs care about the camera notes, the storage figure printed on the page, and whether storage can be expanded. If two phones look alike in the photos, the difference is in those lines, not in the colour of the case. If a line you need is missing, ask. Guessing that a phone “probably” has a feature is not a specification, and this guide will not invent one.

Fix a budget before you look at banners

Decide the most you can pay without borrowing for the rest of the month. Write that ceiling down and do not raise it because a banner says a deal ends tonight. Online mobile shopping is built to hurry you. A budget you chose while calm is your number, not a number from an advertisement.

If a listing is above that ceiling, leave it. A phone that matches your sentence and sits inside your ceiling is a finished decision.

Buy smartphones in Pakistan by reading the listing

When you buy smartphones in Pakistan on a marketplace, the text under the photo is the offer you are about to accept. The photo is the shop window. The text is the shop.

What to look for on the product page

Read the storage, the screen size in the text, and the network details the seller published. If a detail you care about is missing, use the question box before you pay. Check whether the phone is described as new, and whether the listing says it is cleared for use on local networks. A phone that is not cleared can become a problem after it arrives. If the listing is silent, ask the seller in writing and keep the reply. Do not fill the silence with hope, and do not treat one comment that says “mine worked” as proof that yours will.

Seller, warranty and what is in the box

A brand name in the title is not the same thing as a named seller with a warranty you can read. Note how long the cover lasts and who you would contact if the phone fails. Note what the box should contain: the handset, a charger if the listing says one is included, and any papers. You will want that list when the courier is still at the door.

Star ratings are a hint. The same remark in several recent comments is a pattern. One angry comment is not.

Check the return path before you pay

Open Daraz’s returns and refunds guide (https://www.daraz.pk/returns-refunds-faq/) while the product tab is still open. The published FAQ says you can start a return request within 14 days of delivery, and that a product should go back in the original, undamaged manufacturer packaging. It also says there is no charge for shipping the product back, and that you do not have to return every item in an order. Some products are not returnable. Read the list the FAQ points to before you pay.

The steps sit on the how to return a product (https://www.daraz.pk/wow/i/pk/help/how-to-return) page: sign in, open My Orders, and complete the form. If the parcel is not in the condition the policy describes, Daraz says it may send the item back to you. Photograph the seal at the door, keep the box clean, and do not tape the manufacturer's box.

Daraz states that its refund table does not apply to Daraz Global products. If a badge on the listing is unclear, ask first. Help with orders, payments and returns (https://buyer-helpcenter.daraz.pk/s/page?language=en&pageId=2) is where you track a parcel or raise a case. For payment and delivery habits, read safe online shopping in Pakistan (/online-shopping-in-pakistan-safe-payment-delivery-returns).

A short checklist for online mobile shopping

Use this on the day you pay.

1. The phone matches the sentence you wrote about your Tuesday.
2. The price on the listing, not a price from this article, is inside your budget.
3. Storage, warranty and network status are on the page, or the seller has answered in writing.
4. You know who the seller is, and the warranty says who you would contact.
5. You have read the return window and the packing rule.
6. You opened the smartphones category (https://www.daraz.pk/smartphones/) from the site itself, not from a link a stranger sent.

When one line is false, close the tab. Daraz (https://www.daraz.pk/) will still be there tomorrow.

Questions shoppers ask

Should I buy the phone with the loudest discount banner?

No. A banner is an advertisement. Choose a smartphone in Pakistan by the job, the seller and the return rules. If the banner still fits after the six lines above are true, it is a bonus. If it does not fit, it is noise.

The listing does not mention local-network clearance. What should I do?

Ask the seller in writing before you pay. If you cannot get a plain answer, pick another listing. Do not pay in the hope that someone can sort it out later.

What if the box arrives and the phone is not what the title promised?

Keep the packaging, photograph what you received, and start a return from My Orders inside the published window. Use the Help Center if the form will not accept the request. Do not throw the box away and then try to send the phone back.

Can this guide tell me which model to buy?

It should not. Models, prices and specifications change from listing to listing. The page in front of you is the only honest source for those details.

The pages named above were read on 3 November 2026. If a Daraz rule has changed, the live FAQ wins.

Final SEO check: smartphone guide

Edited from the draft before submission.

- The focus keyword now opens the first sentence. In the draft it arrived only after a story about too many tabs.
- The H1 is still the assigned topic, used once. A new H2 carries “buy smartphones in Pakistan”.
- Internal links are named: returns FAQ, how to return, Help Center, smartphones category, homepage, and the companion shopping post. The draft left several of these as bare URLs and missed the Help Center.
- The six-line checklist replaced the looser “compare two listings” passage. The idea stayed. The form is easier to scan.
- The FAQ is four H3 questions. The draft had three, under a heading that admitted it was unfinished.
- No price, model, or specification was added during the edit. The 14-day window and the packing rule stay attributed to Daraz’s returns FAQ.
- Meta title and description were checked against the 60-character and 140–155 rules. They live in `seo-block.md`.
- Word count of the final is inside 1,000–1,200.

Outline: Online Shopping in Pakistan

Status: outline, before the draft.

SEO plan

- Focus keyword: online shopping in Pakistan
- Secondary keywords: cash on delivery, Daraz Wallet, return window, help with orders
- H1 is the assigned topic, used once.
- Focus keyword in the first sentence, in one H2, in the meta title, and in the slug.
- Payment and return facts are only the ones published on Daraz's own returns FAQ and refund policy, and they are paraphrased. The reader is sent to those pages because the tables can change. Daraz Global is called out as outside the refund table, because the policy says so.

Online Shopping in Pakistan: Safe Payment, Delivery and Return Tips

1,099 words. The assigned range is 1,000–1,200.

Status: draft. Not the submitted version.

A parcel is not safe because the listing had a green badge. It is safer when you can explain, in order, which site you used, how you paid, what you checked at the door, and how you would send the item back. That is the whole of careful online shopping in Pakistan. The rest is detail you confirm on Daraz's own pages, because those pages can change and this draft should not pretend to be the policy.

No prices appear below. No payment method is called the winner.

Open the real site, on your own account

Type daraz.pk or use a bookmark. A link in a chat can wear the right colours and still be the wrong place. Stay inside the tab you opened. If something tells you to confirm the order on another site, close it.

Shop on an account you control. Shared logins muddle the address, the phone number and the wallet. Before you pay, read the address and the number the courier will dial. One wrong digit is enough to lose an afternoon.

Pay where the checkout tells you to pay

Anything that asks you to transfer money to a person "so they can hold the item" is not checkout. Daraz's refund policy names card payments, HBL direct transfer, Daraz Wallet, Easypaisa, cash on delivery, vouchers, JazzCash and instalments. You do not need the list by heart. You need the method that was on the screen, and you need to know a refund may not travel back along the same path. The policy also says the refund table does not cover Daraz Global products. Read the live page at https://www.daraz.pk/refund-policy/ before you rely on a row.

Cash on delivery lets you keep the money until a parcel arrives. It does not inspect what is inside. The policy describes those refunds as going to Daraz Wallet, which has to be activated or you cannot use the amount. Switch the wallet on before delivery day if a return is even slightly likely.

Card and wallet payments mostly stay on their own trail, except where the policy says a JazzCash or cash-on-delivery case is refunded to the wallet instead. Assume nothing about the route until you have read your row. Never send a photo of a card, a one-time password, or a picture of your balance. Checkout does not ask for those.

At the door

Follow the parcel in your account. A texted code from a stranger is not your order page. If the courier’s story and the account disagree, believe the account until the box is in your hands.

Look at the outer packing before you sign or hand over cash. Crushed, torn or wet packing should be photographed, and you should say so. Then match the contents to the title: name, colour where it mattered, and the pieces the listing promised. If the order is a phone, that match is the whole point of deciding the contents before you paid. Keep every box. A return without packaging is a weaker return.

The window is a date, not a mood

The returns FAQ at https://www.daraz.pk/returns-refunds-faq/ says you can request a return within 14 days of delivery. Send the item back in the original undamaged manufacturer box, with no tape on that box. The FAQ says you are not charged to ship it back, that shipping you already paid is part of the refund, and that a partial return is allowed. It also points at items that cannot be returned. After the 14 days, the FAQ says the return route is closed and a later fault is a warranty question for the brand, if a warranty exists.

Count from the delivery date in the account. Politeness is a good way to miss the date. The form lives under My Orders on the how-to-return page, https://www.daraz.pk/wow/i/pk/help/how-to-return . Put the order number and the return tracking number on the outside, as that page asks.

If it goes wrong, do not pay a second time

A message that says a second transfer will unlock the first payment is a reason to stop, not a reason to open your banking app. Use the account’s help tools, save screenshots of the listing, the total and the box, and note the day the parcel arrived. If the refund feels slow, read the row for your method. The policy ties its timing to a quality check, and the times are not identical for cards, bank transfers, wallets and cash on delivery. One number cannot cover all of them, so this draft does not invent one. Global items follow a different note. Ask, using the order you already have.

Keep a small record

Before the courier arrives, screenshot the order page: the title, the total, the address and the promised contents. You will not remember the exact title once the box is open and the room is busy. Store the picture with the date. If you pay cash on delivery, note that you did, because the refund route described for that method is the wallet, and you will want to know which row to open later.

After delivery, add one more picture of the sealed parcel and one of the contents next to the packing. This is not a legal essay. It is a way to answer the form without reconstructing the afternoon. The final version points this habit at the Help Center, where tracking and returns already sit together. This draft only says: do not trust your memory more than the account.

Questions this draft still answers plainly

Is paying at the door the careful choice?
It is careful only about when the cash leaves you. It is not careful about the contents, and the refund path described for it is a wallet, not notes in your hand.

The carton arrived crushed.
Photograph it, tell the courier, keep it, and start a return inside the window if you do not want the item.

One item in the order is wrong. Must everything go back?
The FAQ says no, you can return the item that is eligible. Check the non-returnable list before you assume a sale item qualifies.

Who can tell me the refund has landed?
The policy row for the way you paid, not a comment under the product. Activate the wallet if that row points there.

This draft puts the focus keyword late, uses bare URLs instead of named internal links, and still needs the Help Center linked beside tracking. The final pass fixes that shape.

Online Shopping in Pakistan: Safe Payment, Delivery and Return Tips

1,112 words. The assigned range is 1,000–1,200.

Online shopping in Pakistan is safer when you treat the order as a short process, not as a single tap. You open the real site, you pay on its checkout, you look at the parcel before you sign, and you already know how a return works. None of those habits depends on a lucky seller.

This piece does not list prices, and it does not crown a payment method. Daraz publishes the methods and the refund rules. Those pages can change. The habits below send you to the live page before you pay, and again if something arrives that you did not order.

Shop from the site you opened yourself

Type the address or use a bookmark you saved. A link in a message or a forwarded image can look official and still be someone else’s page. Once you are on Daraz (https://www.daraz.pk/), stay in that tab until you have paid or decided not to. If a pop-up tells you to “confirm” on a different site, close it.

Use your own account. A shared login hides which address, phone number and wallet the order used. Check the delivery address and the courier’s phone number before you pay. A wrong digit is a simple mistake and a costly one.

Pay only on the Daraz checkout

The safe payment is the one the checkout offers while you are logged in. Do not transfer money to a personal account because a message said it would hold the item.

Daraz's refund policy names several ways an order may have been paid: debit or credit card, HBL direct transfer, Daraz Wallet, Easypaisa, cash on delivery, a voucher, JazzCash, and equated monthly instalments. Pay with a method you saw on the checkout. A refund does not always return by the same route. The policy also says its refund table does not apply to Daraz Global products. If a listing badge is unclear, ask before you pay. Read the current table on the refund policy (https://www.daraz.pk/refund-policy/).

Cash on delivery

Cash on delivery means you pay when the parcel arrives. People choose it when they want to see that a parcel turned up before money leaves their hand. It is not a check on the item inside. The refund policy says cash-on-delivery refunds go to Daraz Wallet, and that the wallet has to be activated before you can use the amount. If you might return the order, activate the wallet before delivery day.

Cards, wallets and bank transfer

A card payment stays on the card trail, and a wallet payment stays on the wallet trail, except where the policy says otherwise. It describes some JazzCash and cash-on-delivery refunds as going to Daraz Wallet rather than back to the original app. "I paid with this, so the money will reappear there" is not always true. Open the policy before you buy something you are unsure about.

Do not send a photo of your card, a one-time password, or a screenshot of your balance. Checkout does not need those pictures.

Delivery day habits

Track the parcel from your account. The Help Center (https://buyer-helpcenter.daraz.pk/s/page?language=en&pageId=2) puts tracking next to returns, cancellations and payment options. If a courier's call and the account status disagree, trust the account until you have seen the box.

Look at the outer packing before you sign or pay. If it is crushed, open or wet, say so and photograph it. Then compare the item with the title: the name, the colour if colour mattered, and the pieces the listing promised. For a phone, write those pieces down before you pay, which is the point of the smartphone buyer's guide (/how-to-choose-the-right-smartphone-in-pakistan). Keep the packaging. A tidy room is not worth a refused return.

Use the return window while it is open

Daraz's returns and refunds FAQ (https://www.daraz.pk/returns-refunds-faq/) says you can start a return request within 14 days of delivery. The product should go back in the original, undamaged manufacturer packaging. Do not put tape on the manufacturer's box. The FAQ says there is no charge for shipping the product back, that the shipping you were charged is included in the refund, and that you may return some items without returning the whole order.

Those rules have edges. The FAQ points to items that are not returnable. After 14 days it says a return is not possible, and it points a later fault toward the brand warranty if there is one. Warranty is not the same as a Daraz return.

The how to return (https://www.daraz.pk/wow/i/pk/help/how-to-return) page is the form: My Orders, the request, then pickup or drop-off. Write the order number and the return tracking number on the outer package, because the page asks you to. Count the 14 days from the delivery date in your account, not from the day you finally opened the box.

When the order goes wrong

Use help with orders before you send a second payment “to unlock the first one”. Stay in the Help Center. Keep screenshots of the listing, the checkout total and the box, and write down the delivery date.

If a refund seems late, read the policy row for your payment method. The policy says its clock starts once a quality check is finished, and the times differ for a card, a bank transfer, a wallet and cash on delivery. This article will not invent one number for every method. If the item was Daraz Global, do not use the local table. Ask the Help Center which rule applies.

Questions shoppers ask

Is cash on delivery safer than paying now?

Only in one way: you still have the cash until a parcel arrives. It does not inspect the item, and a refund is described as landing in Daraz Wallet rather than as cash in your hand. Choose it when that trade is acceptable.

The box is damaged. Should I refuse it?

Photograph it, tell the courier, and keep the packaging. Then start a return from your account if you do not want the item, inside the published window.

Can I return one thing from a multi-item order?

The returns FAQ says you do not have to return the whole order. Confirm that your item is returnable first. Do not assume a sale item follows the same rule.

Where does the money go back to?

It depends how you paid. The refund policy lists the route and says the wallet must be activated for wallet refunds. Read your row. Do not copy a stranger’s comment under a product.

Final SEO check: safe online shopping

Edited from the draft before submission.

- The focus keyword now opens the first sentence. The draft spent that sentence on green badges.
- H2s name the habits in order: the real site, checkout, delivery day, the return window, and what to do when an order fails.

- Bare URLs became internal links with ordinary anchor text, including the Help Center and the smartphone guide. The draft mentioned help tools without linking the Help Center.
- Cash on delivery, Daraz Wallet, card, bank transfer, Easypaisa, JazzCash and instalments stay as methods the refund policy names. No method is called safest in every case. No single refund duration was invented for all methods.
- The 14-day window, packaging rule, free return shipping and partial returns stay paraphrased from the returns FAQ, with the reader sent to the live page.
- Daraz Global is still excluded, because the policy says the table does not cover it.
- Meta title and description are in `seo-block.md`. Final word count is inside 1,000–1,200.

Five-minute walkthrough: Zaheer

Spoken notes for the Day 10 walkthrough. Read at a steady pace, about five minutes.

I am Zaheer, and my practice site is Daraz Pakistan. I had already done keyword research, but the sheet was not in this workspace, so I did not invent search volumes. I took the focus keywords from the two assigned topics and from what each live page is actually for.

The homepage keyword is “online shopping in Pakistan”. The old title had that idea at the start, which is right, and the brand at the end, which is also right, but the title was 72 characters. The description was the single word “Pakistan”. My replacement is 51 characters, still starts with the keyword, still ends with Daraz, and the description is 145 characters. It tells a shopper to compare sellers and then browse.

The smartphones page is where the first blog has to send people. The live title was exactly 60 characters, but it led with “Mobile Price”. I will not quote prices, so I will not put price in the title either. The new title starts “Buy smartphones in Pakistan” and ends with Daraz. The old description was 192 characters and called the phones the best and the price the best. Mine is 141 characters and points at the seller, the warranty and the return rules.

Returns were already close. The FAQ title and description were 60 and 140, so length was not the problem. The brand was at the front. I moved “returns and refunds” to the start and Daraz to the end. The how-to-return title had no brand at all. It now starts with the task. The Help Center was the weak page: title and description were both “Help Center”, 11 characters. The new title is “Help with orders, payments and returns”, and the description tells you to track a parcel or contact care.

For the blogs, the focus keywords are “choose a smartphone in Pakistan” and “online shopping in Pakistan”. Each meta title starts with that phrase and ends with Daraz. Each description is inside 140 to 155 characters and contains a next step. The slugs repeat the topic in ordinary words.

Inside the articles I put the keyword in the first sentence and in one H2. The smartphone piece uses H3s for the two kinds of day a phone has to survive, then for the listing and the seller. The shopping piece uses H3s under payment, for cash on delivery and for cards and wallets. Both end with an FAQ in H3s. Internal links go to the five audited URLs, plus each blog links to the other.

I checked facts instead of inventing them. From Daraz’s own returns FAQ I used the 14-day window, the original packaging rule, no charge to ship a return, and the option to return only part of an order. From the refund policy I named the payment methods the page itself names, and I said cash-on-delivery refunds are described as going to Daraz Wallet. I did not copy the timing tables, because one number does not fit every method, and the policy says the table does not cover Daraz Global. Where a phone’s storage or network status matters, I told the reader to read the listing. I did not supply a specification.

The draft had the same bones and the wrong shape. The keyword arrived late, some links were bare URLs, and the Help Center was missing. The final pass fixed those and kept both articles between 1,000 and 1,200 words.

If I were marking this against the brief, the audit is the ten marks, these metas are the thirty, the two finals are the forty, and the tracker plus this walkthrough are the deadline and feedback marks. I would ask the trainer two things. First, whether “Daraz” or “Daraz.pk” is the brand they want at the end of a title, because the live site uses both and I picked the shorter one so the keyword could stay in front. Second, whether a keyword sheet will be shared later. I will swap the focus phrases if the sheet names a different wording, and I will still not add a search volume I do not have. That is the submission.

Site audit: Kaya Skin Clinic

Trainee: Amna

Site assigned: https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/

Read on: 3 November 2026 (Asia/Karachi)

The assigned address redirects to the UAE English site, `https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en`. A `/pk/en/` path returns 404. The five pages below are the live UAE pages closest to the two blog topics and to a first visit. Treatment pages are built in the browser, so the title and description are what a results snippet can rely on. Visible body copy was thin in the first HTML response. That is noted, and it is not filled in with invented clinic statistics.

The training rule: title within 60 characters, focus keyword near the start, brand at the end. Description between 140 and 155 characters, with the keyword and a call to book or read. New copy does not promise a result and does not repeat customer counts.

1. Homepage

- URL: https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en
- Live title (68): Kaya Skin Clinic UAE – Skin Care, Body And Hair Treatment Specialist
- Live description (158): Kaya Skin Clinic is one of the largest skincare clinics in Middle East with 20 clinics in the region, 24 dermatologists, and over 350,000 satisfied customers.

The title is 8 characters over 60, and it starts with the brand instead of the service. The description is 3 characters over 155. It spends that space on size and customer figures. The homepage text retrieved with the page showed different figures ("15 UAE Clinics" and "600,000 Customers"). The snippet and the page do not match. New copy leaves the numbers out. A conflicting figure is worse than no figure.

The visible heading on the page was "Beauty that runs deep". That line does not say what the clinic treats, so the meta description has to do that job.

2. Laser hair removal

- URL: https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/treatments/laser-hair-removal
- Live title (82): Laser Hair Removal in UAE | Long-Term Hair Reduction and Smooth Skin | Kaya Clinic
- Live description (187): Explore Laser Hair Removal in UAE at Kaya Clinic for smoother skin, reduced maintenance, and long-term hair reduction tailored to diverse skin tones, treatment areas, and lifestyle needs.

The keyword is in the right place, and the brand is at the end. Both fields are far too long: 22 characters over on the title and 32 on the description. The extra words are result language ("long-term hair reduction", "smoother skin", "reduced maintenance"). The training rule for clinic writing is no promise of results. A snippet should offer a consultation, not an outcome.

3. Acne and acne scars

- URL: https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/treatments/acne-acne-scar
- Live title (79): Acne Treatment in UAE | Pimples, Oily Skin and Breakout Solutions | Kaya Clinic
- Live description (213): Ice pick, boxcar, rolling scars, or acne marks? Learn the different types of acne scars, compare laser vs chemical peel treatments, and discover how many sessions you may need. Expert guide from Kaya Clinic Dubai.

The title is 19 characters over, and "solutions" sounds like a cure. The description is 58 characters over. "How many sessions you may need" teases a number this submission will not invent, and it implies the article can prescribe a course. The brand is present, which is good. The city "Dubai" appears only at the end of a description that is already about the UAE page.

4. About the clinic

- URL: https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/about-us
- Live title (85): The Kaya Skin Clinic Story - Trusted by over 350,000 Customers | Kaya Skin Clinic UAE
- Live description (166): Kaya Skin Clinic, an international chain specialises in advanced dermatological solutions for women and men, with its commitment to comprehensive aesthetic skin care.

The title is 25 characters over, mostly because it repeats the brand and inserts a customer count that does not match the homepage snippet (350,000 in both of these, against 600,000 on the homepage text). The description is 11 characters over and says "solutions", which is a soft promise. A first-visit page should say who the clinic is for and how to book.

5. Meet the experts

- URL: https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/meet-the-experts
- Live title (69): Meet Our Best Dermatologist in United Arab Emirates| Kaya Skin Clinic
- Live description (169): Meet the team of best dermatologists at Kaya Skin Clinic UAE. Our team of highly qualified specialists offers personalized skin and hair care. Book an appointment today!

The description does have a call to action, which the other pages often miss. It is 14 characters over, and "best" is a ranking the page does not need. The title is 9 characters over, misses a space before the pipe, and says "dermatologist" in the singular while the page is a team. The keyword is close to the start. That part can stay.

What the five pages share

Keyword and brand placement is often half right, and length is the failure. Clinic pages also use result language and headcount figures that disagree with each other. The replacements stay inside the character rules, name the service first, end with "Kaya Clinic", and invite a consultation or a read. They do not say a treatment will work, and they do not quote a number of clinics, doctors, customers or sessions.

New meta titles and descriptions: Kaya Skin Clinic

Brand at the end of every title: Kaya Clinic

Rule: title within 60 characters, focus keyword at the start, description 140–155 characters with the keyword and one next step. No result claims and no headcount figures.

FAQ intent

Will it guarantee a result, will it hurt, what if the skin on the area is already troubled, and what should someone bring. Every answer sends the decision back to a clinician who has seen the person.

Laser Hair Removal: What to Expect Before, During and After Treatment

1,084 words. The assigned range is 1,000–1,200.

Status: draft. Not the submitted version.

People ask for laser hair removal after they are tired of dealing with hair at home. A fair answer starts with a conversation, not with a promise. This draft says what to expect before, during and after a clinic visit. It does not say the hair will stop, that the skin will look a particular way, or that the visit will feel like nothing. Hair, skin, hormones, medicines and the body area change the answer. A clinician who has seen you is the only person who can give it.

If another page already sounds sure about your result, leave that page. Certainty without an examination is advertising.

Book the talk first

Do not arrive having decided from a photograph. Read what the clinic publishes about the service, then sit with a person and ask whether it fits you. You can leave without booking a treatment. You can ask for the aftercare in writing. Background about the clinic is not the appointment.

Take a written list into the room. Medicines, including creams. Skin that is already sore, broken or infected. Recent sun and any self-tan. How you remove hair now, and when you last did it. Pregnancy, trying for pregnancy, or breastfeeding: say it, do not wait. A hormonal condition, or hair that changed when your health changed: say that too, and let them interpret it. They cannot see a fact you hide.

Then ask a short set of questions. Is this area suitable, and why? Will they look first, and do they sometimes test a small patch? Which home methods should you stop, and from when? Their timetable is the one you follow. A video timetable is not. What do they use to protect eyes if the face is involved? What is a reason to phone the clinic the same day? Who will actually perform the visit?

A vague answer is a reason to pause. A clear refusal is a useful result. It means the treatment was never yours to book.

In the room

They should describe the next step before they take it. You should know the area, how you will lie or sit, and the words or gesture that mean pause. If you feel you cannot speak, the visit is already wrong.

Sensation is personal. This draft will not call it mild. Ask what their patients usually say, and treat the reply as their experience rather than a promise. If you need them to stop, say so. Duration depends on the area. A single time quoted before anyone has looked is a guess. Ask what they expect for you, and what happens if the visit ends early.

Near the eyes, ask what you wear and what they wear. Ordinary sunglasses are not clinic kit. You may also ask why that device, for your skin and hair, today. You are not expected to learn the engineering. You are expected to hear a reason that mentions you, not only the clinic’s habit.

Afterwards

Before you go home, ask what they expect you to notice and what should make you call. Write both down. Do not score your evening against a photograph of a stranger.

Ask about sun, heat, sport, makeup and the products you meant to use on that skin. If they give a number of days, it is their number. This draft will not invent one. A sheet beats a cheerful “you will be fine”. If that is all they offer, ask them to be specific while you are still in the chair.

Do not pick or scrub. Do not add a wax or a peel because the week looks empty. If you want another treatment as well, ask whether the two can be close. Further visits are their decision. So is stopping. Very light, grey or white hair, and a recent hormone change, are things to mention, not things for an article to rule on.

What this draft refuses

It is not a diagnosis or a plan. It does not permit home treatment of broken, infected or recently operated skin. It does not print a guarantee. Skin that is already spotted, painful or scarred may need a different conversation. Say so at the start. Anyone who cannot consent, including a child, needs the clinic’s own rule and the right adult in the room. This page does not invent an age.

Ask how a test patch works

Many people have heard that a clinic may try a small area first. Do not treat that rumour as a step you can demand, and do not treat its absence as a shortcut. Ask whether this clinic uses a patch test for someone like you, what they are watching for, and how long they want you to wait before a wider visit. If they do not use one, ask what they use instead to judge your skin. Write the answer down. A waiting period, if they give you one, is theirs. This draft will not supply a number of days, because a borrowed number is how people ignore the person who examined them.

Also ask what “stop” means in practice: who you call, what the clinic needs to see, and whether you should come back or stay home. A plan for a worried evening is part of informed consent. It is not a prediction that the evening will go badly. The final version keeps this question and ties it to the team page, so you know who should answer.

Questions to carry into the appointment

Will the hair be gone for good?
Do not accept that claim from a blog. Ask what the clinician has seen in people similar to you, and what they do if you are disappointed. An “if not” plan is worth more than a slogan.

How much does it hurt?
This page cannot know. Ask, ask how to pause, and decide after the consultation. A caption that says painless is not an examination.

There is already a rash on the area.
Show them. Do not cover it and hope. Postponing, refusing, or choosing another area are all acceptable clinical answers.

I might want to walk out.
Then walk out. Keeping a home method is a complete decision.

The final version needs the focus keyword in the opening sentence, real internal links to the treatment page, the team page and the acne article, and headings that name “before”, “during” and “after” more clearly for search.

Laser Hair Removal: What to Expect Before, During and After Treatment

1,117 words. The assigned range is 1,000–1,200.

Laser hair removal is a clinic visit, not a bottle you add to a basket. People book it because they want a proper conversation about whether a clinic treatment belongs in their life. This page explains what that conversation tends to involve, before, during and after. It does not promise that hair will stop, that skin will look a certain way, or that you will feel nothing.

Suitability is individual. Hair colour, skin, hormones, medicines and the area of the body all change the answer. Only a qualified clinician who has seen you can give it. If a page, including this one, speaks as though it already knows, close it.

Before laser hair removal, book a conversation

Start with a consultation, not with a decision you made from a photo. Read the clinic’s laser hair removal (https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/treatments/laser-hair-removal) page so you know what they say they offer, then bring your questions to a person. About Kaya Clinic (https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/about-us) is background, not a substitute for the appointment. You are allowed to leave without booking. You are allowed to ask for instructions in writing.

What to bring to the consultation
Write this down so you do not forget it in the room.

- Medicines you take, including anything you put on the skin.

- Skin conditions you know about, and any area that is sore, broken or infected.
- Recent time in the sun, and any self-tan still on the skin.
- How you remove hair now, and roughly when you last did it.
- Whether you are pregnant, trying to become pregnant, or breastfeeding. Say so. Do not wait to be asked.
- Any hormonal condition, or a change in hair that arrived with a change in health. State it. Let them decide what it means.

The clinician can only work with what you say and what they can see.

Questions that decide whether you continue

Ask these out loud. Is this area suitable for me, and why? Will you look at the skin first, and do you test a small patch before a wider visit? Which of my usual hair-removal methods should I stop, and when? Follow their timetable. Do not borrow one from a video. What eye protection do you use if the area is on the face? What should I avoid afterwards, and what should make me call the same day? Who in the dermatology team (https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/meet-the-experts) will actually do the visit?

If the answers are vague, you do not have to continue. A clear “this is not suitable” is a successful consultation.

During a laser visit

The clinician should say what they are about to do before they do it. You should know which area, how you will be positioned, and how to ask for a pause. A visit where you feel you cannot speak is the wrong visit.

People describe the sensation in different words. This page will not call it comfortable, quick or mild. Ask what patients usually report, and treat that as the clinic’s experience, not as a promise for your skin. If it is more than you can accept, say so.

Time in the room depends on the area. A single duration quoted without looking at you is a guess. Ask for their estimate for your area, and ask what happens if they stop early. Eye protection matters near the eyes. Ask what you will wear and what the clinician will wear. Sunglasses from your bag are not clinic equipment.

Ask why they chose the device for your skin and hair. You do not need to become an engineer. You need a plain reason. “It is what we always use” is weaker than “we chose this because of what we saw today”.

After a laser visit

Before you leave, ask what is ordinary to notice that day and what is a reason to call. Write it down. Only the person who treated you can say what they expect in your case. Do not judge your evening against a stranger’s photo.

Ask about sun, heat, exercise, makeup and any product you planned to put on that area. The number of days is their instruction, not a number this article should invent. If they give you a sheet, follow the sheet. If they only say “you will be fine”, ask them to be precise before you go home.

Do not pick, scratch or scrub the area. Do not book a wax or a peel on the same skin because the calendar looked empty. If another treatment from the clinic's skin, hair and body list (https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/treatments) is on your mind, ask whether the two can sit close together.

A clinician may talk about further visits, or may refuse. This page will not tell you how many visits you need. If your hair is very light, grey or white, or your hormones have been changing, ask whether that changes their advice.

Who this page will not advise

This is not a diagnosis and not a treatment plan. It will not give permission to treat infected, broken or recently operated skin at home, and it will not offer a guarantee. A guarantee is not something a careful clinic page should print.

If the skin is already breaking out, painful or scarred, say so. You may need a different conversation first. The piece on acne care basics (/acne-care-basics-daily-habits-and-when-to-see-a-dermatologist) covers daily habits and when a dermatologist should see the skin. It also refuses to promise a clear complexion. Children, and anyone who cannot consent, need a clinician's decision with the right adult present. This article does not set an age rule. The clinic does.

Questions people ask before they book

Does laser hair removal guarantee the hair will stop?

No. Ask what the clinician has seen in people with hair and skin like yours, and what they will do if you are unhappy. A plan for "if not" is more useful than a promise.

Will it hurt?

Nobody here can feel your skin. Ask what people report, ask how you can pause, and decide after the consultation. Do not book because a caption said the visit was painless.

Can I book it on skin that already has acne or a rash?

Tell the clinician and let them look. Do not cover the area and hope it will not matter. They may postpone, refuse, or treat a different area. All three are proper answers.

What if I want to leave?

Then leave. A consultation exists so you can decide. Staying with shaving or another home method is a finished decision, not a failure.

Take these questions to a real appointment. The clinic page describes the service. The person in the room decides whether it is for you.

Final SEO check: laser hair removal

Edited from the draft before submission.

- The focus keyword is now the first two words of the article. The draft reached it only inside the opening paragraph.
- Headings now say "before laser hair removal", "during a laser visit" and "after a laser visit", so the secondary keywords are visible in the outline.

- Internal links were added to the treatment page, the about page, the dermatology team, the treatment list, and the acne article. The draft had none.
- The patch-test passage stayed, and it still refuses to invent a waiting period.
- A pass for result language removed nothing that promised an outcome, because the draft did not contain one. The final keeps the explicit refusals: no guarantee, no pain claim, no session count, no age invented for the clinic.
- Meta title and description are in `seo-block.md`. The description asks the reader to book a consultation. It does not say the treatment will work.
- Final word count is inside 1,000–1,200.

Outline: Acne Care Basics

Status: outline, before the draft.

SEO plan

- Focus keyword: acne care basics
- Secondary keywords: daily skin habits, see a dermatologist, acne consultation
- H1 is the assigned topic, used once.
- Focus keyword in the first sentence, in one H2, in the meta title, and in the slug.
- Daily habits are hygiene and gentleness, not a treatment plan. No claim that a food, a wash, or a clinic visit will clear the skin. No session counts. No product doses.

Acne Care Basics: Daily Skin Habits and When to See a Dermatologist

1,071 words. The assigned range is 1,000–1,200.

Status: draft. Not the submitted version.

A sensible week of acne care basics has two parts. One is a gentle habit at the sink. The other is a moment when you stop trying new things and let a dermatologist see the skin. Neither part is a promise that the spots will go. A routine that suited someone else can sting you. If your own clinician has already given instructions, those instructions win over this draft.

Nothing here is a dose, a brand you must buy, or a count of clinic visits.

Stay gentle on purpose

Home care is for not making the skin angrier. The strongest product in the cupboard is often the wrong one, because sore skin is harder to assess later.

Wash with a gentle cleanser and your hands. Skip the rough cloth. Use the rhythm your clinician set, if they set one. Lukewarm water is enough. Very hot water and a hard flannel feel serious and leave tightness behind. Pat the skin dry. If a headscarf, helmet, collar or mask sits on the skin for hours, wash that skin gently too. Do not announce that the fabric caused the spots. Mention it at the appointment and let a trained person weigh it.

Keep your hands off individual spots. Squeezing adds a wound. It is not treatment. Remove makeup before sleep. “Non-comedogenic” on a label is the maker’s hint, not a guarantee, and your clinician can tell you whether makeup belongs in your week at all.

Change one product at a time. Three new things on the same morning make a mystery. If something stings hard, or the skin swells, weeps or becomes very sore, stop and ask. Do not continue because the bottle mentioned purging. Ask a clinician about sun protection instead of copying a number from a forum. Some prescribed or clinic treatments increase sun sensitivity. A fresh pillowcase and a wiped phone are ordinary hygiene. They are not a cure, and continuing spots are not a character flaw.

The limit of a habit

A habit does not choose an acid, a tablet or a machine. It does not prove a food is guilty. Food questions belong with someone who knows your health. A short diary is fair to bring. Cutting out meals because a caption said so is not.

Two careful weeks that look unchanged are not a failure. Some patterns need training. Switching to a harsher wash out of frustration is how skin becomes both spotty and raw. If you also want hair removed on the same area, do not book both ideas in secret. Say both in one consultation.

Signs that the sink is not enough

Arrange a proper look if the spots are deep, painful or swelling. Arrange one if marks or pits worry you, or if the pattern returns after you have been gentle. If the skin is hot or weeping, or you feel unwell, get care promptly rather than shopping for another scrub. Do not use someone else's prescription, and do not buy a strong product just because the bottle looks clinical.

Also book if your sleep, your work or your willingness to go out has changed. You do not need a speech about vanity first. You may also book from plain curiosity, knowing the visit might end in advice and nothing else.

The first conversation

Expect questions about what you have used, what you take, and how the month goes, plus a look at the skin in ordinary light. The clinician might send you home with a habit, or might talk about clinic care. Ask what they think is happening, in ordinary words. Ask what to do and what to stop. Ask what should bring you back, and what should make you call sooner.

Read the names of the team before you travel if the clinic lists them, but do not confuse a web page with a relationship. Ask how the first visit is arranged, and if any further treatment is mentioned, ask what it is for and what it will not be claimed to do. Leave with the home steps written down. "We will sort it" is not a plan. A promise that one visit ends the problem is a reason to be careful, not a reason to relax.

What to take into the room

A dermatologist can do more with a clear history than with a speech about how upset you are, though the upset matters and you should say it. Before you go, note when the spots tend to appear, what you have put on the skin in the last month, and which product you stopped because it hurt. If you are comfortable, a photo taken in daylight on a typical day can remind both of you what "usual" looks like. Do not edit the photo. Do not start a new product the night before so the appointment sees a different face from the one you live with.

Write your three questions on paper. In the room it is easy to nod and leave without the home steps. The final version turns this preparation into the consultation section and links the clinic pages a reader would open next. It still does not promise that the visit will clear the skin.

Questions this draft leaves you with

Does a gentle wash mean I can skip the dermatologist?

No. The wash only tries to limit irritation. Pain, scarring or real distress are reasons to book. Mild skin that you are happy to watch can be watched, on purpose.

A spot looks ready to squeeze.

Leave it. Swelling or strong pain is a reason to ask, not a reason to use your thumbs.

Which foods should I drop?

This draft will not say. Bring a diary if you want the question discussed. A stranger's meal plan is not care.

A new product hurt.

Stop. Do not layer a second new product on top. Badly sore, swollen or blistered skin, or feeling unwell, means you should seek care. Slight tightness can rest until the consultation, where you mention it.

The final edit puts the focus keyword in the first line, adds internal links to the acne page, the team, the about page and the laser article, and turns the sign list into a scannable set of lines. The medical boundary stays: no result is promised in either version.

Acne Care Basics: Daily Skin Habits and When to See a Dermatologist

1,130 words. The assigned range is 1,000–1,200.

Acne care basics are two things in the same week: a gentle daily habit, and a clear point at which you stop experimenting and see a dermatologist. Neither half promises that your skin will clear. What calmed a friend can sting you. This page is a way to be kinder to your skin while you wait for advice, and a way to notice when waiting is no longer the plan.

It is not a prescription. It names no dose, no brand you must buy, and no number of clinic visits. If a sentence here conflicts with your clinician, follow the clinician.

Daily skin habits that stay gentle

The aim at home is to avoid making the skin angrier, not to fight it with the harshest product in the cupboard. Sore skin is harder for a dermatologist to read when you finally go.

Washing, without scrubbing

Wash with a gentle cleanser and your hands, not with a rough cloth. If your clinician has already set a rhythm, use theirs. Lukewarm water is enough. Hot water and a flannel used like sandpaper feel thorough and often leave the skin tight. Pat dry. Clean and calm are allowed to be the same thing.

If you wear a headscarf, a helmet, a collar or a mask for long hours, include that skin in the gentle wash. Do not conclude that the fabric caused the spots. That is a claim this page will not make. Mention the fabric at the appointment so it can be considered.

Hands, makeup and new products

Do not squeeze, pick or drain a spot. It is how people add a mark they then regret, and it is not treatment. Take makeup off before sleep. If you use makeup, you can look for “non-comedogenic” on the label and ask whether makeup is fine for you at all. A label is a hint from the maker, not a certificate.

Introduce one new product at a time. If you change three things on Monday, you will not know which one disagreed with you. If a product stings sharply, or the skin becomes very sore, swollen or weeping, stop it and ask for help. Do not push through because a bottle said purging.

Ask about sun protection rather than copying a number from a forum. Some treatments make skin more sensitive to the sun. Your clinician knows whether yours do. Change a pillowcase when it is due, and wipe the phone you press to your cheek. These are cleanliness steps.

They are not a cure, and they are not a reason to blame yourself if spots continue.

What these habits do not do

They do not replace a dermatologist, and they do not name the right acid, tablet or machine for you. They do not prove that a food caused the breakout. Diet belongs with the clinician who knows the rest of your health. You can take a simple diary. You should not cut out a food group because a caption said so.

A careful fortnight that looks the same is not a personal failure. Some patterns need training. Carrying on with a rougher wash is how people arrive both spotty and sore.

If you are also thinking about hair removal on the same area, do not stack the plans. Read what to expect from laser hair removal (/laser-hair-removal-before-during-and-after) only as questions, and tell the clinician about both wishes in one visit.

When to see a dermatologist

Book a proper look, rather than another week of experiments, if any of these are true.

- The spots are painful, deep or swelling.
- You are seeing marks or pits that worry you.
- The same pattern keeps returning after you have been gentle for a while.
- The skin is hot or weeping, or you feel unwell with it. Seek care promptly. Do not try a new scrub tonight.
- You are about to buy a strong product, or someone has offered you their prescription. Do not share prescription products.
- The skin is changing your sleep, your class or work, or whether you will leave the house. You do not have to call that vanity before you ask for help.

Curiosity is a valid reason to book, as long as you know the visit may end in advice rather than a procedure.

What a first acne consultation is for

A first visit is a history and a look. The clinician will ask what you have used, what you take, and how the skin behaves across the month. They may say a home habit is enough, or they may suggest clinic care. The acne care (https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/treatments/acne-acne-scar) page is how the clinic frames that care. The person in the room sets the plan.

Ask three things. What do you think is going on, in plain words? What should I do at home, and what should I stop? What would make you want to see me again, and what should make me call sooner?

The dermatology team (https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/meet-the-experts) page lets you read names before you travel. A name on a website is not yet a relationship. About the clinic (https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/about-us) can explain how a first visit is arranged. It cannot say how your skin will respond. If the plan includes something from the wider treatment list (https://www.kayaskinclinic.com/uae/en/treatments), ask what it is for and what they will not claim it does.

Write the home instructions down before you leave. “Use this, skip that, come back if this happens" is a plan. "We will sort it" is not. No honest clinician can promise the first visit ends the problem.

Questions people ask

If I follow a gentle routine, do I still need a dermatologist?

The routine only limits extra irritation. It is not a test you must pass before booking. If spots are painful, scarring or deeply upsetting, book. If they are mild and you are content to watch, watch on purpose.

Is it useful to squeeze a spot that has come to a head?

No. Leave it. If a spot is very painful or the area is swelling, ask a clinician. Do not use two thumbs.

Can this page tell me which foods to drop?

It will not. Take a food-and-skin diary if you want that discussed. Dropping meals on a stranger's advice is not acne care.

What if a new product makes my skin sore?

Stop it. Do not add a second product to calm the first. If the skin is badly sore, swollen or blistered, or you feel unwell, seek care. If it is only a little tight, rest it and mention it at the consultation.

Acne care basics are patience at the sink and honesty about what a sink can do. The rest belongs with a dermatologist who can see you.

Final SEO check: acne care basics

Edited from the draft before submission.

- The focus keyword now opens the article. The draft buried "acne care basics" after a clause about a sensible week.
- "Daily skin habits" and "when to see a dermatologist" are H2s, matching the assigned topic and the secondary keywords.
- The signs that mean "book" are a list, which the draft wrote as a paragraph. The preparation notes moved into the consultation section.
- Internal links were added to the acne page, the dermatology team, the about page, the treatment list, and the laser article. The draft named those ideas without links.
- No food was banned, no product was dosed, and no sentence promises clearer skin. "Non-comedogenic" is described as a maker's hint. Squeezing is still discouraged as a habit, not as a cure.
- The instruction to seek care promptly when skin is hot, weeping, or accompanied by feeling unwell was kept. That is a safety line, not a treatment claim.
- Meta title and description are in `seo-block.md`. Final word count is inside 1,000–1,200.

Five-minute walkthrough: Amna

Spoken notes for the Day 10 walkthrough. Read at a steady pace, about five minutes.

I am Amna, and the practice site is Kaya Skin Clinic. The address we were given opens the UAE English site. There is no Pakistan section on that host, so I audited the live UAE pages and I did not pretend the clinic was somewhere else.

I also had no keyword sheet in the workspace, so I did not invent search volumes. The focus keywords come from the assigned topics and from the job of each page: a skin, hair and body clinic; laser hair removal; acne care; about Kaya Clinic; and the dermatology team.

Length was the main fault on the live snippets. The homepage title was 68 characters and started with the brand. The description was 158 characters and spent them on clinic counts and customer counts. Those figures do not even match other text on the homepage, which showed different numbers. I deleted every count. The new title starts with “skin, hair and body clinic” and ends with Kaya Clinic. The description is 149 characters and asks the reader to book a consultation.

The laser title was 82 characters and promised long-term hair reduction and smooth skin. The description was 187 characters and repeated that promise. Mine is “Laser hair removal: questions to ask”. It offers a consultation and says the page is not a promise. The acne title was 79 characters and talked about solutions. The description was 213 characters and teased “how many sessions you may need”. I will not invent a session count. The new description tells the reader to learn the basics and book. About-us led with a customer figure and repeated the brand. Experts called the team the best and missed a space before the pipe. Both now lead with the topic and end with the brand, inside 60 and inside 140 to 155.

The blog keywords are “laser hair removal” and “acne care basics”. Each meta title starts with the keyword and ends “Kaya Clinic”. Each description asks the reader to book, and neither says the skin will change. The slugs are the topics in full.

On the page, the laser article uses the keyword in the first words and in the H2 “before laser hair removal”. During and after are their own H2s. H3s cover what to bring and what to ask. The acne article opens on the keyword, then uses H2s for daily skin habits and for when to see a dermatologist. H3s cover washing and hands. Both articles end in an FAQ. Internal links go to the five audited pages, and each blog links to the other so a reader with both questions can move without searching.

I did not copy the clinic’s treatment claims. I did not say a visit is painless, permanent, or guaranteed. I did not ban a food or name a dose. Where a timetable matters, the article tells the reader to follow the clinician’s sheet. The one firm safety line is to seek care promptly if skin is hot, weeping, or the person feels unwell, and not to share someone else’s prescription.

The drafts had the same boundaries and a weaker shape. The keyword sat too late, and there were no internal links. The final pass added the links, moved the keyword forward, and kept each article between 1,000 and 1,200 words.

On the marking split, the five-page audit is the ten points, the titles and descriptions are the thirty, the two finals are the forty, and showing up with the tracker and this walkthrough is the twenty for deadlines and feedback. I would ask the trainer one thing before anyone publishes: the greeting says Ammara and the brief says Amna, and I have filed the work under Amna. I would also ask whether the brand line must be “Kaya Skin Clinic” in full. I used “Kaya Clinic”, which is what several live titles already say, because the full name pushes a keyword off the front of a 60-character title. I will not add a result claim to buy those characters back. That is what I would walk through on day 10.
